A Convention of FES 2015
#DigiKon15 – The Digital Society
November 24th-25th, 2015
Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung, Hiroshimastraße 17, 10785 Berlin

Digitization surrounds nearly all areas of our interaction. It can change our lives to the better, but it can also do the opposite.

Currently the intersections of network society are increasingly controlled by a small number of private enterprises. Issues that affect everyone and that are public are increasingly subjected to capitalist logics. Decisions are determined by economic and not by democratic rules.

But digitization can support societal progress if shaped democratically by society as a whole. This is the key idea of the convention at Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung in 2015.

- In what way do the conditions of digitization influence the public sphere and political processes?
- Does digitization have a positive effect on individual freedom and where is it at stake?
- At times of digitization, are we facing a privatization of the public and simultaneously a commercialization of the private?
- Which opportunities does digitization offer for economic development and where is societal wealth at risk.
- In what way does a digitized public affect political participation?
- Does digitization lead to a fragmentation of society or does it create new forms of solidarity?
